How well do we support people's wellbeing?

5 - Very Good

We found significant strengths in aspects of the care provided and how these supported positive outcomes for people, therefore we evaluated this key question as very good.

Care and support arrangements were tailored to meet people's outcomes, and people were fully involved in making decisions about their care. Care plans were comprehensive and contained details about how people's needs should be met in accordance with their wishes. Care plans were reviewed and adapted regularly. People were seen as experts in their own lives and this person-led approach ensured that they had control over how their care was delivered.

People should expect that their health and wellbeing benefits from their care and support. People were fully involved in making decisions about their physical and emotional wellbeing through their personal plans. The service was flexible and adaptable to meet people's needs. This promoted independence and helped people to maintain their skills and abilities.

People were supported by a consistent team of staff who knew them very well. People described how care staff supported them in ways that were meaningful to them. This familiarity enabled staff to quickly identify changes in people's health or presentation, which ensured that people got the right care and support at the right time.

People felt that their care visits were always punctual and reliable. People told us, "the staff are very punctual. They're very good", "I'm very well looked after" and "we have a great time together going out and about." This gave people confidence and reassurance that the service would turn up when expected.

The service supported people to take their medication safely and effectively through prompting by staff. People were supported to take their medication independently and this enabled them to have as much control as possible over their own medications.

There were good records maintained within people's files of the daily care provided. This included information such as support offered, nutritional intake and how they generally presented. This enabled staff to build a picture over time of what was typical for the person and to adjust support if required. People found communication with the service to be very good. One person said, "if I have any issues, I just phone and it gets sorted". This meant that people's care and support was consistent and stable because staff worked together well.

People told us that they had recently had a formal review of their care and support. At these meetings with the service, they had felt able to talk about their experiences. We saw records which demonstrated reviews were happening regularly.

It was evident from our discussions with people, families and staff, that staff and management know people very well and that this helped inform staff deployment, mitigate the risk of a breakdown in communication and provide the desired care and support.

How good is our staff team?*5 - Very Good

People should expect that the skill mix, numbers and deployment of staff meets the needs of people. We found significant strengths in aspects of the care provided and how these supported positive outcomes for people, therefore we evaluated this key question as very good.

At this inspection we also examined staff recruitment as part of our core assurances and focused on assessing staffing arrangements.

Staff were being recruited safely. The provider followed national Safer Recruitment guidance. The process of recruitment was well organised and documented so that all the elements of the procedure were followed consistently and audited on an ongoing basis. Detailed policies and processes were in place to ensure that they fully monitor and comply with any restrictions placed on staff as part of their right to work in the UK. This meant people using the service could be confident that staff had been recruited safely and were working within their requirements, whilst keeping them safe from harm and risks.

The staff team were highly valued by people experiencing care. This was reflected in the feedback from people receiving care and their relatives. We observed kind and caring interactions between staff and people, and saw encouragement and inclusion being supported. Some comments we received included: "they're all excellent", "without their support I don't think it would be possible for my relative to remain at home" and "we cannot rate the staff highly enough". This assured us that the staff team were caring and compassionate in their daily practice.

There were effective systems in place to plan and manage calls, which meant there was good communication and a high level of continuity within staff teams. People described the benefits of having regular staff and how the office kept them up to date. The management team understood their role and contribution to the overall quality of the service and how they play an important part in building the staff team.

Staff described feeling supported and listened to, describing management as available and responsive. They had regular supervision and checks, which meant they were confident in working with any colleagues. Staff said they loved their job, one said; "we are like a family, we look after each other". They understood their role and responsibility, describing how they would respond to changing situations whether for an individual or where unplanned absence meant changes to deployment. This team approach promoted good information sharing and a positive atmosphere which benefitted the care and support for people.
